HONGKONG, JUNE 30, 1894.

The uncertainty of the law is well illustrated by the results of the cases tried before various Consular Courts at Shanghai in which the Bank of China, Japan, and the Straits Settlements, sued to recover claims from foreign shareholders. In the first case the French Consular Court decided in favor of the defendant on the ground, broadly speaking, that a French shareholder cannot be compelled to pay calls to a non-French Company which has not complied with all the conditions of the French Company Law. In the second case, tried before the Danish Consular Court, the Court decided in favor of the Bank. In that case the defendant in the first place contested the competency of appeal to one common ultimate tribunal. The position is suggestive of possible serious consequences as regards Public Companies having shareholders at the Treaty Ports of China and Japan. Some twelve or fifteen years ago there was an agitation for the extension of the advantages of joint stock enterprises to the Treaty Ports and ultimately registration of Public Companies formed elsewhere was allowed in Hongkong. Advantage has been taken of this permission by several concerns in Shanghai and Japan, in which the shareholders are of various nationalities. In the case of the French shareholders, if the judgment of the French Consular Court at Shanghai is to be taken as a precedent, it would be impossible to recover calls. In other cases we must presume that the various Consular Courts would endeavour to decide the disputes equitably, but the decisions at which they arrived might be as diverse as are those of the Danish and American Consular Courts at Shanghai, and the Straits Settlements; and it is impossible to say what view might be taken by a Chinese Court of the liabilities of Chinese shareholders. The uncertainty is certainly to some extent exaggerated, but on the whole it is not likely to interfere materially with the general prosperity of the numerous joint stock concerns doing business in the Far East.
